Product introduction

1. What is remy hair and non-remy hair

Anyone that has considered having hair extensions added to make their hair look even better has surely heard of Remy hair extensions. The term Remy has quickly become synonymous with high quality.

People that want to look their very best are willing to pay a little more for their extensions so that they can ensure that the completed look will be amazing. Remy hair extensions are much smoother and do not tangle very easily. This is due to the process of bundling the hair.

Bundling Process

Remy hair is carefully bundled so that all of the hair roots are together at the top and the direction of the cuticles are all the same as well. This prevents it from getting tangled easily, which is very much appreciated by those that are wearing them. When non-Remy hair extensions are made, the hair is gathered from the floor where they were cut and bunched together. The roots and cuticles may be in all different directions and the hair simply looks messy. It is unattractive and more difficult to work with once they are in place on the head.

Styling Tools

Remy hair extensions are also made from real hair. This allows the person that is wearing them to use their curling irons, flat irons, or other styling utensils to create the amazing look that they are working towards. When synthetic hair extensions are in place, applying too much heat will make them melt together or change in texture so that they look awful. When this happens, everyone will know that you have hair extensions and that you went the cheap route to get them.

Price Differences For Remy vs Non Remy

The price difference between Remy hair extensions and non-Remy hair extensions can be rather significant. It does cost more to have extensions that look real and that will enhance your look rather than make it look worse. If you were to ask anyone that has paid the extra money to get the Remy hair extensions if they felt that the price was fair and the investment was worth it, you will likely hear amazing stories about why they would do it again and again.

They have come to find out, through personal experience or stories from friends, what can go wrong when you go with synthetic extensions or the cheaper, lower quality extensions and have made the decision to pay the price to get the best possible outcome in their hair style.

The Main Difference is Quality

There are many differences between Remy hair extensions and non-Remy hair extensions but the biggest and most important to most people is the quality of the extension. While it is possible to find cheaper hair extensions out there, you really do get what you pay for. For someone that is not as concerned about how natural the final look will be, the cheaper extensions may work just fine. Someone that wants to look great and know that they have done all that they can to make it happen, the Remy hair extensions are most.
